Mr. Bush's War
by Murray N. Rothbard

August 1990. Things were looking grim for Mr. Bush and the Establishment. Now that Communism in Soviet Russia and Eastern Europe had surrendered, the Cold War was suddenly over. How could U.S. imperialism be justified, now that combating the Red Menace was no longer available? Bush's enormous military budget was in some trouble: how justify those missiles, bases, and all the rest? What is more, paleo voices on the Right, notably headed by Pat Buchanan, wanted to know: now that the Cold War is over and Communism is defeated, why shouldn't America Come Home? [For my own contribution to this paleo-debate, see "Foreign Policy for the Post-Cold War World," Chronicles, May 1990, pp.16-20.] A good question; so what was the answer?

The Establishment tried to run many answers up the flagpole; the uncertain world (true but a bit vague); "international narco-terrorism" (fine for small-scale stuff but not really BIG); German re-unification (Hitler—fine, but a bit old-hat); anti-Semitism in Russia (Pamyat! the Protocols! Great stuff but what exactly are we supposed to do about it?); Islamic fundamentalism (Irving Kristol's point; good, but a bit passe, and besides that scary old Ayatollah is dead!)

Finally, the Bush Administration got its fondest prayers answered: an authentic seeming menace popped up, as Saddam Hussein, maximum leader of Iraq, launched a lightning-fast, brilliantly executed attack on August 2 against neighboring Kuwait. Aha! Saddam is a despotic dictator who attacked a small nation (another Hitler!), in a quick strike (blitzkrieg, just like you know who!). That's it! Since Hitler kept attacking one country after another (to take back the territory taken from Germany at Versailles), it follows that Saddam will also keep attacking unless he is stopped? Stopped, of course, by you know who—the divinely appointed International Policeman against Bad Guys all over the world: Uncle Sapi! To save our beloved friend "Saudi Arabia," perhaps to kick the evil Saddam out of poor little Kuwait, the U.S. sends in a huge chunk of its army, air force, marines, and almost the entire navy to Arabia.

Comment #1. Golitsin! Here's a beautiful chance to test the North-Abraham-Gray et. al thesis that the entire collapse of Communism was a brilliant trap to lure the West to lay down its arms, and then to receive the ultimate

Well, you can just imagine! Every geek, crazy, loony, in the movement hitched his way to this great event.

They earn brownie points called "dollars." Like the old one-room schoolhouse? Yes, indeed. You can always depend on Marshall to be ahead of the curve. (And speaking of Marshall, to end the suspense from last month's Ear: the dear boy was sentenced to 60 days in prison and a $500 fine after his police-traffic contretemps.) But that's not all! There was also (4) the much revered National Committee of the LP, meeting at the same time, in the same hotel! Can mere mortals stand so much concentrated wondrousness? Well, you can just imagine! Every geek, crazy, loony, in the movement hitched his way to this great event; organizers were calling up libertarians with apartments or houses or—more likely—cars upon blocks in the area, wheedling free "crash space" for these lovelies. High/low points of the Conference: John Baden, that big angry Mountain Man environmentalist, claimed that one old tree is more important than a hundred live people (applause from the Mods). George Smith and Marshall Fritz debated the question: "Is the Bible Libertarian?" Ask a stupid question, you're bound to get a stupid answer. (Applause for the No answer from the Mods.) Millie Friedman gave the Keynote address at the banquet. Jim Peron introduced Millie as one of the four Mt. Rushmore giants of 20th-century libertarianism, the other three being Mises, Hayek, and Rand. Friedman (standing ovation at the beginning) proceeded to trash Rand and especially Mises as "intolerant" and "lacking humility." It's an old routine of Millie's (talk of the Pot calling the Kettle black!) but why did the assembled Mods give him a standing ovation after his trashing of a man whose boots he isn't fit to lick? Come to think of it: the audience, Jim Peron and the rest, and Millie make a wonderful fit. Yecchh!

The Alaska LP, reeling from its failure to get on the ballot, has just had its computer and last few thousand dollars stolen by one of its own members.

Former LP auditor Mike Holmes, CPA, has discovered through an independent analysis of the national LP's finances that party leaders are lying about paid membership. There are, at most, 5,500, with 4,000 a more likely figure.

The Marrou for President campaign in the LP is heating up: Jim Lewis, beloved tax rebel, flew into Vegas and agreed to become Marrou's campaign manager.

Speaking of Andre, he's now dumped his wife Eileen for a much younger woman. Andre, long without visible means of support, had lived with Eileen's parents. Who's paying now? •

timate hammer blow from the Soviet Union, (as "predicted" by a KGB defector some years ago, Colonel Golitsin.) Well, guys, here's the Window of Opportunity at long last. While virtually the entire armed forces of the U.S. are squaring off across the "line in the sand" at the evil Saddam, Soviet Russia... strikes! sending the missiles, parachuting guys across the Bering Straits into North Dakota, moving south. Red Dawn! John Milius, where are you now that we need you? [Note: this isn't my theory, folks.]

And so George Bush got his lovely war. Everyone, of all parties and ideologies left, right, and center, all the media, the entire parade of Washington Middle East "experts" who all seem to have just stepped out of a Mossad meeting, are unanimous in praise of Bush and okaying the alleged necessity to stop this "megalomaniac," this "Hitler." America must "stand tall" and all the rest [How about sitting for a change?]. Bush's approval rating, shaky because of S&L failures, zooms upward; no one in Congress so much as mentions the War Powers Act designed to curb this sort of shenanigans, and everyone but everyone is saluting the marching bands and the soldiers off to war. Bush gets his military budget hands down. And as we go marching, virtually only Pat Buchanan, Joe Sobran, and Robert Novak show any reluctance or appreciation of the complexities on which we are embarked.

Comment #2. All right, for a moment forget Vietnam: Remember Lebanon! Does anyone remember when Mr. Stand Tall himself, Ronald Reagan, got U.S. Marines into Lebanon, and how he/ we turned tail and ran when the Marines were chopped up? Strange that no one, then or now, ever remarked on this fiasco, much less absorbed its lessons. Lesson of Lebanon: U.S., stay the hell out of the Middle East! (Another lesson: don't trust the Israeli state. A new book by ex-Mossad agent Victor Ostrovsky reveals that the Mossad had advance warning of the carbomb attack on the Marine barracks, but withheld it to further "poison U.S.-Arab relations.")

Why Fight for Arabia?

OK, let's examine the arguments for the U.S. march into Arabia and its war against Iraq.

"He's Another Hitler!" Oh come on, knock off the Hitler analogy already. What are you saying, for God's sake? That "if we don't stop him on the Euphrates, we'll have to fight him in the streets of New York?"

Wouldn't it be great, by the way, if everyone observed a moratorium on Hitler for at least a year? No more "another Hitler" everytime someone starts a war someplace, no more bellyaching about Hitler in general. There is more hysteria now, 45 years after his death, than when he was still alive. Isn't this the only case in history where the hysteria against the loser in a war continues, not only unabated but intensified, 45 years after the war is over? And consider too, the guy was only in power for 12 years! In a sense, Hitler will achieve his "1,000-year Reich" after all, because it looks as if we'll be hearing about him for another 900 years or so.

"Saddam's a megalomaniac, he's crazy." Yeah, crazy like a fox. He looks pretty shrewd to me: knocking off Kuwait quickly, and not trying to take on the U.S. frontally. "He's 'unpredictable.'" A code word for crazy. But look, Bush and all his apologists keep saying that Bush should always "keep his options open" so as to keep the Enemy guessing and off-base. But how come when Saddam does that it's "crazy" whereas when Bush does it it's the height of sound strategy? Double standard fellas?

"He's BAD." Very bad, no question about it. [As Dana Carvey, ace Bush imitator, would put it: "Saddam: B-A-A-A-A-D."] But Marshal Kim Il-Sung, Maximum Leader of the still-Stalinist regime of North Korea, is even WORSE. So? Why aren't we launching a big propaganda campaign against Marshal Kim, to be followed by sending army, navy, air force, and U.N. stooges (see below) on North Korea's border, itching for a fight?

And furthermore, the WORST guy, by far the worst guy of the post-World War II era, worse than Saddam, worse even than the Ayatollah (or is he kinda good now?), is the genocidal monster Pol Pot, Maximum leader of the Khmer Rouge, who, as head of the Democratic Republic (Communist) of Kampuchea (Cambodia) genocidally slaughtered something like one-third of the Cambodian population. (His own people! As the media have correctly charged Saddam doing in dropping poison gas during his war with Iran. Although it wasn't "his own," it was against the poor, hapless Kurds, who have yearned for their own country for a 1,000 years, and have experienced nothing but oppression from Iraq, Iran, and Turkey.)

Not only that: the punch line is that the Reagan-Bush administration has been allied with the monster Pol Pot in his guerrilla war against the Vietnamese Communist-puppet regime in Cambodia (Gorbyish Commies as against the ultra-Maoist Pol Pot), shipping Pol Pot weapons, so that he is just about to take over Cambodia once again! (Very recently, the Bush Administration has, in response, pulled back slightly from that commitment to Pol Pot.)

So if we're supposed to go to war against Bad Rulers, why are we allied with—or certainly not hostile to—the mass murderer Pol Pot? To say nothing of a host of other dictators, despots, etc. who have been dubbed "pro-West" by the U.S.?

But let us return to Saddam. Saddam is definitely BAD. But—and here's the point—he was just as bad a few short years ago when he was the heroic "defender of the free world" against the BAD fanatical mullah-run Shiite Iranians (Remember them?). Remember how, in the extremely bloody eight-year war between Iraq and Iran (which, by the way, Saddam launched, shortly after the Iranian Revolution, to grab a key waterway), the U.S. "tilted toward" (in plain English: sided with) Iraq? Well, the current Butcher of Baghdad was the same Butcher of Baghdad then. He was the same totalitarian despot; and he was also the aggressor. So how come the lightning-fast change? And not only that: does anyone remember, not long ago, when two Iraqi fighter planes crippled an American warship in the Persian Gulf, and the U.S. immediately blamed it on Iran? After which we shot down an Iranian civilian airliner, killing hundreds?

But, "you see, Iran was ruled by fanatical theocratic Shiite mullahs, and pro-Iranian Shiaites constituted a subversive threat, at the beck and call of evil Iran, to...Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and the other Gulf States! So whatever happened to those Bay Guys, and that threat? Answer: they're still there. But the U.S. government, and its kept sheep in the media, have decided to forget them, and so, presto changeo! They just disappear in the public press. A couple of years ago, the U.S. government gave the signal: Iran Bad, Iraq Pretty Good, and the media and the politicians all jumped into line. And now, bingo, with no conditions changed, the Administration gives the signal to reverse course: Iraq Bad, Iran Pretty Good, and everyone shifts. And we used to ridicule the Commies for changing their Line (on war and peace, Hitler, etc.) with lightning speed!

But, "he invaded a small country." Yes, indeed he did. But, are we ungracious for bringing up the undoubted fact that none other than George Bush, not long ago, invaded a very small country: Panama? And to the unanimous huzzahs of the same U.S. media and politicians now denouncing Saddam? But Noriega, so Bush and the media told us, was intolerable:

he was untrustworthy and thuggish, he used and even sold drugs, and, moreover, he was pockmarked ("Pineapple-Face," as he was elegantly called by the U.S. media), and he was odiously short. (George Bush, we are told, has an intense aversion to uppity short guys.) Gee, in his dislike of short, pock-marked guys, it's Bush who sounds thuggish to me. Besides, Noriega's attributes as thug, drug-dealer, and even short and pock-marked, never kept him from being a pet of Bush's so long as he continued to take orders from the CIA; it was Noriega's infidelity to the CIA that got him into deep trouble.

And another invader of a small country not universally condemned in the U.S. media was Israel, invader of Lebanon, and invader and occupier for over two decades of the Arab lands of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Why don't the U.S. and the U.N. band together to drive Israel out of these occupied areas? Double standards, anyone? "But Noriega was opposed to 'democracy.'" Ah, come on, don't give me that one. Of course, if the goal of the U.S. action was, as the Bush Administration claimed, to "restore democracy to Panama" (when did they ever have it?), then how come Bush angrily refused the pleas of Panamanians after the invasion to hold free elections? Why did we insist on foisting the Endara clique upon them for years?

By the way, the one refreshing aspect of the U.S. war against Iraq is that no one has yet had the gall to refer to Kuwait as a "gallant little democracy" or to Saudi Arabia in the same terms (see below).

"But Saddam's short-lived 'people's revolutionary' regime" in Kuwait was a puppet government of Iraq's. Absolutely. But so was the Endara government in Panama, sworn in on a U.S. army base a few minutes after the U.S. invasion began. So?

Repeat query: Does anyone really think that we would ever have to fight Saddam in the streets of New York?

Don't Cry for Kuwait!

Before we get all weepy about gallant little Kuwait, about the obliteration of the Kuwaiti nation by an unprovoked bullying attack, etc., let's look at some history.

In the first place, there is no "Kuwaiti nation" in any proper sense. The Middle East is very much like Africa, where the existing "nations" are simply geographical expressions resulting from the arbitrary carving up of the continent by Western imperialism. Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, et al. were simply carved out as mere geographical expressions by Great Britain after the British Empire conquered and sliced up the Ottoman Empire during World War I. Moreover, Britain shamelessly betrayed its promises that it made (through T.E. Lawrence) to give the Arabs independence after the war. Winston Churchill, the quintessential British imperialist, used to boast that he created "Jordan" one Sunday afternoon at the stroke of a pen.

Furthermore, before Great Britain finally granted independence to its Kuwait colony in 1961, it was so little respectful of the "historic borders" of this alleged nation that it carved away one-half of old Kuwait and granted about a half each to the states of Iraq and Saudi Arabia.

And what about historic Kuwait? During the pre-World War I days of the Ottoman Empire, Kuwait was simply a part of the Ottoman district whose capital was Basra, a city in southern Iraq. Iraq has had border struggles with Kuwait since 1961, and it once invaded and conquered Kuwait, which "ransomed" restoration of its independence by paying a huge amount of oil money to Iraq. Moreover, the major Iraqi grievance is that Kuwait has been literally stealing Iraqi oil.

The Rumaila oil field straddles the Iraq-Kuwait border, and Iraq charges that Kuwait has been drilling diagonally from its side of the border to tap reserves from Iraqi territory. An article in the Wall Street Journal admits that "U.S. officials say there is reason to think the Iraqi claim may be true." (Gerald Seib, "Iraq Has Shaky Claim to Kuwait," WSJ, August 13, p. A5).

Another reason not to cry for Kuwait: its rotten social system. Has anyone wondered why the neocons and the rest of the Establishment haven't referred to Kuwait as a "gallant little democracy?" Because it might be little, but it sure ain't no democracy. Little Kuwait (a bit smaller than New Jersey), has a population of 1.9 million; of this only one million are Kuwaitis. The rest are immigrants; including 400,000 Palestinians (who are all pro-Iraq and anti-Kuwait); and several hundred thousand once-dreaded Shiites. These immigrants are not citizens.

Of the three classes of Kuwaiti citizens, however, only the "first class" citizens are allowed to vote. Second and third-class citizens are late-comers who "only" emigrated to Kuwait during the 20th century. They don't count. The "first-class" citizens are limited to those Kuwaiti tribesmen who have been residents in Kuwait since the mid-eighteenth century, when these Arab tribes settled there. They constitute 12% of the Kuwaiti population (about 230,000). Of these, women—of course—can’t vote, reducing the ruling elite to 6% of the total. The 6% elite are allowed to vote for a National Assembly, the Kuwaiti rulers’ feeble concession to representative government. The National Assembly, when allowed to meet, often calls for more power to itself, and more democratic rule. Two weeks before the Iraqi invasion, in an important action not mentioned in the U.S. media, the Emir of Kuwait angrily dissolved the National Assembly. So much for that!

When you get right down to it, then, the ruling elite of Kuwait consists of one royal family, the al-Sabahs, who staff all the top government positions from the ruling Emir on down, and of course run its oil. The al-Sabah family consists of 1,000 males, a family of tribal chieftains. Kuwait, in short, is a ruling Emirocracy or Sabahklatura, who have all become multimillionaires because the land they unjustly rule happens to contain an enormous amount of oil. This is the “legitimate government” of Kuwait that George Bush has pledged himself to restore!

It’s War, Not...

Make no mistake, it’s war. It’s not a “police action.” Note how the Bush Administration, scorning Saddam for calling the interned Americans “restrictees,” is itself engaging in absurd euphemism. An embargo is bad enough; a blockade is, by any standards of international law, an act of war. That’s why the Bush Administration insisted on calling the blockade an “interdiction.” Rubbish.

Bush began his undeclared war as soon as Kuwait was attacked, rushing troops to Arabia, thereby giving no warning and no time for American citizens to leave Kuwait or Iraq before hostilities started. Therefore, Saddam Hussein’s detention of the 2,500 American citizens (plus citizens of other countries engaged in the blockade) is not a “barbaric” or megalomaniacal “taking of the hostages.” In international law, citizens of enemy states are interned for the duration. German citizens were interned by the U.S. for the duration of World War II. So the entire American “hostage” problem is a consequence of the unseemly and precipitate rush to war of George Bush. And when the Iraq government warns that the American internees will be treated no better than Iraqi citizens as food shortages develop, they are perfectly correct. Any harm that comes to the American internees is on Mr. Bush’s head. Is this how Bush goes about “protecting Americans” abroad?

And what kind of war George Bush is waging! The 18th and 19th century “laws of war,” a product of Catholic teaching and libertarian international law, brilliantly separate “government” and “military” from “civilian.” Treating war as a conflict between governments or states, the laws of war barred governments not to injure civilians but only to injure each other. As far as possible, then, warfare was to be confined to military or governmental targets; civilians were not to serve as targets of war. So what did Mr. Bush do, from the very beginning of the Iraq war; not only blockade all exports of oil, but also all imports of food, upon which the Iraqi people depend. In older international law blockades, ships were only to be searched and the cargo seized if it were “contraband,” that is, if it were arms and ammunition. But food was of course never considered contraband, and was supposed to be allowed to pass.

In the Iraq War, however, Mr. Bush is specifically targeting the shipment of food: in a deliberate, brutal, and truly barbaric effort to inflict starvation on the mass of Iraqi peoples. If the blockade is effective, Mr. Bush will be a mass murderer of innocent civilians.

What Are Bush’s War Aims?

And so George Bush has launched his war, but what precisely are his war aims? They are vague and unclear, made worse by the fact that, in refusing to negotiate with Iraq, the U.S. is escalating and maximizing the scope... and the length of the war. How long is this going to go on?

Possible war aims:

a) The minimal. Defense of Saudi Arabia against Iraqi aggression. An ostensible reason. But the evidence of impending aggression against the Saudis was minimal. Iraq has had specific grievances and quarrels against Kuwait; it has had none with Saudi Arabia. Besides: we didn’t have to rush in troops and planes; we could simply have announced that any attack on Saudi Arabia would be defended to the hilt by the U.S. Why didn’t Bush do that?

Besides, why defend Saudi Arabia anyway? The “international Arab effort” is a joke, a transparent cover for Bush’s aggression in the Middle East. As soon as Kuwait was invaded, the Bush Administration bludgeoned the Arab states and the rest of the U.N. Security Council into submission (see below), using maximum muscle to get them to provide a cover for a blatantly U.S. operation. Before the Arab nations were brought into line, the Bush Administration was openly referring to the Saudi and other Arab leaders as “wimps” not willing to “defend themselves.” Why don’t we let the Arabs slug this out? Furthermore, even after the embargo decision, the Security Council was completely unenthusiastic about Mr. Bush’s rush to a naval blockade. The New York Times reported on August 14 that Bush’s announcement of a blockade “left the United States largely isolated” at the Security Council.

Moreover, is defending Saudi Arabia yet another blow in behalf of “democracy”? Saudi Arabia makes the Kuwaiti emirate seem like a democratic haven. In Saudiland, there’s not even a pretense of elections. The Arab people are ruled, absolutist fashion, by the 5,000-man royal tribal family of the Saudis—now oil millionaires. Neither is Saudi Arabia some sort of bastion of “the free world.” Women are prohibited from driving a car, or from walking on the street unescorted by a male relative. Pork and alcohol are outlawed. Why must one American boy die for the absolute rule of the Saud family? Why must the American taxpayer pay untold billions to support and maintain this corrupt family?

One scary point about even this minimal aim: the commitment is endless. If the U.S. feels it has to keep troops in Arabia to defend against possible (not actual) Iraqi aggression, then the commitment is endless: already, even before any shooting, the U.S. has virtually its entire army, air force, and marines in and around Arabia, and we’re already calling up the Reserves. Endless commitment; permanent war for permanent peace; war footing; and enormous continuing military budgets, are our future.

b) The wider aim of kicking Saddam out of Kuwait and restoring the “legitimate” government of the Sabah emirate. How can this be accomplished? Only by a shooting land and air war launched by the U.S. against Iraqi troops. A bloody and unpredictable prospect. Also: even if Saddam is driven out by war, doesn’t this mean a permanent garrison of U.S. troops in Kuwait to keep Iraq out forever? And all the criticisms of the narrower (a) aim apply a fortiori to the wider objectives. And in what sense is that rotten al-Sabah rule “legitimate?”

c) The maximum objective: to crush and topple the Saddam Hussein regime. This aim will involve the greatest costs of them all. Besides, the murder of Saddam, which is what is contemplated (remember the U.S. air strike that murdered Kaddafi’s baby?) will not eliminate the problem. Saddam is not just one man; he is the head of a military-Baath party (secular-socialist) regime, which will continue even if Saddam is murdered. And, what’s more, Saddam will be left as a permanent martyr for the Arab world and a standing object of hatred for brutal U.S. imperialism.

And if Bush proposes to destroy not only Saddam, but also the entire military-Baathist regime, then after such monstrous mass murder, does he expect the U.S. to keep occupying Iraq forever?

Bush’s repeated references to “Hitler” and “Munich” are a strong signal that the U.S. will not negotiate with Iraq, and is tantamount to a call for Iraq’s unconditional surrender. This was the U.S. decision in World War II, which insured that the Germans would fight to the last man. Unconditional surrender maximizes the war and mass murder. In short, no one in war surrenders unconditionally, so proclaiming such an aim means that peace cannot be achieved on any terms short of eradication of the enemy.

Furthermore, we should not forget the reason that Saddam Hussein fought on for eight years after his original aggression against Iran had been foiled, and both countries were left battling in a bloody stalemate: because the Ayatollah Khomeini insisted that a non-negotiable war aim was the removal of Saddam from power. Iran finally had to give up on that insistence on unconditional surrender: why don't we? Are we as fanatical as the Ayatollah?

Let us also stop and consider the grisly and unsatisfying record of U.S. war and quasi-war in the Middle East since World War II: the fiasco in Lebanon, the air strike killing Khaddali's baby, the shooting down of the Iranian civilian airliner in the Gulf. As Robert Fisk recently pointed out in the London Independent: "Not once has a foreign military adventure in the Middle East achieved its end." U.S. out of Arabia!

The Revival of the U.N. and "Collective Security"

Perhaps the most dangerous aspect of Mr. Bush's war against Iraq is the sudden resurrection of the United Nations as originally conceived. The U.N. was dedicated to the old, disastrous, and failed League of Nations concept of "collective security against aggression." Given existing national boundaries, any "aggression" of one state against another must trigger the nations-states of the world to band together to combat and "punish" the designated aggressor. [See my "The Nationalities Question," RRR, No.4]. The effect of this misguided policy is to enshrine every dubious state boundary as moral and just, and to maximize every pip-squeak boundary dispute into a world crisis. It is also a mechanism for freezing the unjust status quo in place forever. For at any time, any zero point, when the policy begins, countries which had previously used force to expand their boundaries find their ill-gotten gains locked in permanently. The "have-not" nations [in terms of land area] are permanently crippled for the benefit of the have nations.

The United Nations was founded to put more teeth into the abject failure of the League of Nations attempt to enforce collective security. The Security Council was supposed to designate and move against "aggressors." The U.N. reflected Franklin D. Roosevelt's disastrous idea of a condominium of large, allied nations permanently running the world, in particular a condominium of the U.S., Britain, China, and the Soviet Union. [The Soviet Union had been committed to collective security ever since the pronouncements of Maxim Litvinov during the Popular Front period of the 1930s.]

The one good thing about the Cold War is that it split the U.S. and the U.S.S.R., and ended any policy of a superpower condominium in service of collective security, since each superpower has a veto in the Security Council. Fortunately, the exercise of the veto power by the U.S. and U.S.S.R. had reduced the U.N. to an ineffectual "debating society." [Contrary to U.S. propaganda, the U.S. has often used the veto power, especially to veto resolutions against Israeli aggression.] In short, the one good thing about the Cold War is that it kept the U.S. out of war.

But now, Gorby, in addition to liquidating socialism as fast as possible, has unfortunately totally sold out to U.S. imperialism, going along abjectly with Mr. Bush's bludgeoning of the "international community" into war against Iraq. Maybe, soon and hopefully, this will all end as the U.S.S.R. dissolves into many constituent sovereign republics, each of which will be busy with its own concerns. And since many of these republics seem to be devoted to private property, free markets, and national self-determination, perhaps they will also proceed onward to the libertarian foreign policy of isolationism and non-intervention.

But we can't wait for such events. The time has come to reevaluate the entire concept of the United Nations, and to revive that grand old slogan: "Get the U.S. Out of the U.N. and the U.N. Out of the U.S."

What Kind of an "Oil War?"

Bush has had the gall to proclaim in his Pentagon speech of August 15 that "our jobs, our way of life, our own freedom" are at stake in the war against Iraq. Freedom? Way of life? How? Then comes the reference to oil and its importance to the U.S. And so: under cover of the "war against a new Hitler" and "against aggression," comes the frank proclamation of an oil war. In one sense, this is refreshing, for it is seldom that U.S. imperialism acknowledges an overriding economic motive to its aggression.

But what sort of oil war are we embarked on? The standard media account is that unless we fight for Kuwait or Arabia, the evil Saddam Hussein will "control" the world's oil, will be "king of the world's oil," as one TV reporter put it.

Most commentators have, understandably, focused on the trials of the American oil consumer, on how there is danger of Saddam, once taking over oil reserves and wells, jacking up the price of crude oil stratospherically, thus injuring the U.S. consumer and economy.

But let's look at the question rationally. Iraq is a member of OPEC, and has been recently attacking Kuwait for producing more crude oil than its OPEC-assigned quota. OPEC is a cartel of oil-producing governments, and the only way the OPEC can raise the price of oil, as economics tells us, is to cut crude oil production. And to agree upon production cuts (which no one likes to do), there must be maximum production quotas for each country.

Cartels, however, do not have unlimited power. Their revenue depends on the demand schedules of purchasers. OPEC could not raise oil prices stratospherically, because its revenues would fall as buyers purchase far less oil.

The peculiar aspect to the current "crisis" is that OPEC had far more power to raise oil prices—and did so—in the 1970s. In the early 1970s, it was able to quadruple the price of oil (because of the Arab embargo of oil to the U.S. during the Israel-Arab Six Day War), and to double it again in 1979 (after the shutdown of Iranian oil because of the Khomeini Revolution). But OPEC has nothing like such power now. Since the oil shocks of the 1970s, more oil has been discovered, and produced, in non-OPEC countries (such as Mexico, the North Sea), and U.S. and other consumers are using less petroleum per product. The OPEC proportion of world oil output fell from 56% in 1973 to only 32% today. And since 1973, the amount of oil and gas needed to produce a dollar of GNP in the United States has been cut by 43%. All this can be predicted from economic theory: that higher prices call forth a greater supply, and that consumers and other buyers restrict their demands for oil and move to other sources or to more oil-efficient energy uses.

In fact, it is generally agreed that, even if Iraq could tighten OPEC production further, it could not raise oil prices by more than a few dollars a barrel. Is it worth waging an incalculably heavy and endless war to save consumers a few dollars a barrel on oil, or a few cents a gallon on gasoline?

Besides, if oil price raises are the problem, why didn't the U.S. move in force in 1973 against the OPEC countries, sending troops into Saudi Arabia and Kuwait to take them over and force them to lower the price of crude oil? Why should the U.S. balk at a few dollars a barrel now when it stood still for a quadrupling of the price of oil two decades ago?

Not only that: the U.S. government's concern for the consumer might be better gauged if we realized that the very same liberals and centrists now whooping it up for war against Iraq, have been agitating for a huge (say 50 cents a gallon) tax on gasoline, thereby shafting the U.S. consumer far more than Saddam could possibly do. Why is gouging the consumer unmercifully perfectly OK if it is government gouging by the U.S.? These same liberals and centrists are even now advocating a higher federal tax on gasoline.

Further: Our embargo and blockade on oil can only have the... effect of raising the prices of oil and gasoline higher than Saddam could ever have done without this crisis manufactured by the United States.

And finally: If the Bush Administration and the mob of media and political liberals and centrists are so dad-blamed interested in lowering oil prices and in the American consumer, why aren’t they calling for getting U.S. government restrictions off American oil supply: specifically, allowing expansion of production of Alaskan oil (and the hell with the caribou!), and allowing off-shore oil drilling off Santa Barbara and other areas (and the Hell with the pristine beaches and the sea view enjoyed, without paying for them, by upper-class Californians!).

The war against Iraq, then, has nothing to do with any “national interest” that Americans may have in an abundance of oil and in keeping its price low. Does that mean that this war is in no sense an “oil war?” No—it means that it’s a very different—and far more sinister—kind of oil war: a war not for the American consumer but for the control of a supply and of the vast profits from oil. A war, in short, for narrow economic interests against the interests of the American consumer, the taxpayer, and of Americans who will die in the effort.

Specifically, why the U.S. hatred of the cartelist Saddam and its great tenderness and concern for the cartelist Saudis?

First, the long-term “friendship” with the “pro-West” despot of the Saud family. This “friendship” has been concretized into Aramco (the Arabian-American Oil Co.), the Rockefeller company that has total control of Saudi Arabian oil—and long-time heavy influence if not control, over U.S. foreign policy. After World War II, Aramco (owned 70% by Rockefelller companies—Exxon, Mobil, and Socal, and 30% by Texaco) produced all of Saudi oil.

Originally, Aramco owed King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia $30 million in royalty payments for the monopoly concession. And so, James A. Moffet, former vice president of Standard Oil of N.J. (now Exxon), who had been appointed as Federal Housing Administrator in World War II, used his influence to get the U.S. Treasury to pay Ibn Saud the $30 million. In addition the King got an obliging “loan” of another $25 million from the Rockefeller-dominated U.S. Export-Import Bank, at taxpayer expense, to construct a pleasure railroad from his capital to his summer palace. In addition, President Roosevelt made a secret appropriation out of his boodle of war funds, of $165 million to Aramco to do preparatory work for its pipeline across Saudi Arabia. Furthermore, the U.S. Army was assigned to build an airfield and military base at Dhahran; the base, after costing U.S. taxpayers over $6 million, was turned over gratis to King Ibn Saud in 1949. Dhahran, not coincidentally, was close to the Aramco oilfields.

During the 1970s, Aramco was “nationalized” by Saudi Arabia, a process completed in 1980. But the nationalization was phony, because the same Aramco consortium immediately obtained a contract as a management corporation to run the old, nationalized Aramco. More than half of Saudi oil production goes to the old Aramco-Rockefeller consortium, which sells the oil at a profit to whomever they wish, in obedience to Saudi cartel regulations. The remaining part of Saudi oil is run and distributed by the Saudi government directly, through Petromin (the General Petroleum and Marketing Organization), the marketing arm of the Saudi Petroleum Ministry.

It all boils down to a happy case of the “partnership of industry and government”—happy, that is, for the Saud family and for the Rockefeller oil interests.

Iraq, on the other hand, has very little dealings with the Rockefeller Empire. In contrast to heavy dealings with Iran (in the Shah’s day), Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and the rest of the Gulf states, the big Wall Street banks reported that they had virtually no loans outstanding, or deposits owed, to Iraq. Thus, Citibank (Rockefeller) reported that its risk of loss to Iraq was “zero,” and similar reports came from Chase Manhattan (Rockefeller) and the rest of Wall Street.

And so: the war against Iraq is a war over oil, all right, but not on behalf of cheap oil or abundant oil to the U.S. consumer. It is a war of the Rockefeller Empire against a brash interloper.

Bush’s Pentagon speech takes on heightened meaning when he talks about everyone suffering “if control of the world’s great oil reserves fell into the hands of that one man, Saddam Hussein.”

Let us consider George Bush, until stepping in as vice-president, a member of the ruling executive committee of David Rockefeller’s powerful Trilateral Commission. Let us consider preppie George and his Texas oil friends, who will benefit, not simply from a rise in the oil price, but from controlling the supply and profits therefrom.

Must Americans fight and die, and American taxpayers be looted, so as to ensure further profits for the Rockefeller Empire? That is the choice that faces us all.

Let us heed the wise words of retired Admiral Gene LaRocque, head of the pro-peace Center for Defense Information, who attacked the Iraq war in tones of Old Right isolationism: “This is a war over the price of oil and I don’t think we want to sacrifice the life of one American boy to keep the price of oil down or the king of Saudi Arabia on the throne.” LaRocque added that “we couldn’t drive Iraq out of there with air power. And using ground forces would be Vietnam all over again—only worse.” [Juan J. Walte, “U.S. Beefs Up Forces in Region,” USA Today, August 6, p. 5A].

We should also heed the words of Mrs. Jeanne Kirkpatrick, scarcely known for isolationist sentiments. Saddam, she writes, “is not directly dangerous to the United States or to our treaty allies.” She goes on to charge that Bush is fighting the war in the spirit of the U.N. doctrine that also fueled our fighting of the Korean and Vietnam wars: collective security. “Those wars,” she points out, “did not work out well.” Mrs. Kirkpatrick concludes that only the Arabs themselves, not the U.S., can solve the Saddam problem. [Jeanne Kirkpatrick, New York Post, August 13.]

A final cause must be noted for Mr. Bush’s war: the influence of the powerful Zionist lobby. Saddam Hussein poses no threat whatever to the American consumer, or to U.S. national interests; but he does pose a threat, not only to Rockefeller profits, but also to the State of Israel. Note how the Zionists in the media and in Congress are leading the pack calling for war, and how they call, with relish, for “destroying Saddam and his military capacity.”

Two of the most powerful influences on American foreign policy are the Rockefeller interests and the Zionist lobby. When these two groups join, look out! How can the average American and American interests ever prevail?

Epilogue: W.C. Fields and the Food Fight

My favorite foreign-policy analyst, W.C. Fields, was asked during World War II to write an essay in a Saturday Evening Post series on “How To End the War.” “Uncle Bill” Fields sat down, and quite seriously, proposed that the heads of all the warring countries be invited to the Hollywood Bowl, there to “fight it out with sackfuls of dung,” the winner to be declared victor in the war. Naturally, the Post did not run the article.

I was reminded of this tale when, during the abortive Arab League summit of August 10, and after Kuwaiti Foreign Minister Sabah al-Ahmed al-Jaber denounced all Iraqis as “haramiyee” (thieves), Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz took the grilled chicken on his plate and hurled it at Sabah, hitting him full in the face. Sabah promptly collapsed to the floor. Well that’s it, gang. Tariq won the food fight (by a country mile); Sabah is a wimp; so let’s award the victory to Iraq and let’s all go home!
